It may not make the headlines often, but we know that suicide, depression, and problems with alcohol and medications are issues that older adults face. It is important that we focus efforts on this population because:

The U.S. Census Bureau indicates that by 2030, there will be nearly 75 million Americans over age 65.

A 2012 study from the Institute of Medicine found that nearly one in five older Americans has one or more mental health/substance use conditions.

Although they comprise only 15.2 percent of the U.S. population, older adults accounted for 18.2 percent of suicide deaths in 2016, and males 75 years old or older have suicide rates nearly double of any other age group.

Caring for older adults is an important part of SAMHSA's mission, and as with other groups, there are strategies that can help mitigate and prevent negative outcomes.

This event is designed to raise public awareness around the mental health of older Americans, and spur actions to address their needs by promoting evidence-based approaches to mental health and substance use prevention, treatment, and recovery supports. This event also will highlight the importance of collaboration between the mental health and aging networks and highlight where people can seek treatment and services when needed.
